

The Attack

A shrill alarm pierced through the night.

The sound of footsteps, sprinting down stairs.

A glowing whip hangs at the elf's side; her partner readies an arm cannon towards the door.

Their daughter stands behind them, loading a crossbow under a shimmering barrier, ready to take cover behind a full-size cannon.

The elf hears a ping of alarm and begins casting a spell.

The door blasts open; a crack of thunder explodes just outside the door. Metallic shrapnel flies in every direction as the initial fodder are wiped away immediately.

A larger construct looms into view immediately; in the distance, a dozen ships are already visible. The large Horror immediately lurches forward, mid-swing, before a barrage of cannon fire and arrows send it staggering back.

Smaller Horrors dart into the opening, spraying fire. The roar of flames is silenced by the crack of a whip, amplified a thousandfold, as it obliterates a Horror and extinguishes the wall of flames through pure sound waves.

A resounding crack explodes from outside as a horror fires a magical projectile, shattering the barrier around the daughter.

The large Horror slams a fist through the door and steps inside, lunging to exploit the new vulnerability. A second barrier of force extends from the gnome; it shatters immediately under the force of the blow.

The gnome wipes the blood from her face and readies a barrage of cannon fire at the large Horror. Its arm blows off; oil and lubricant splatters the room.

A Horror slides in where the arm had been and fires a device at the gnome; a bubble of impenetrable force surrounds her, cutting her off from the world.

The daughter screams out for her mother; she lunges forward, desperate to get her back, to save her.

The large Horror exploits this vulnerability.

The daughter lays on the floor, sight failing, arm reaching desperately for her mama.

In the distance, an elf cries out. In the distance, the crack of a sniper shot.

Silence.